Synopsis

This is not a chorus film. Well maybe just a little...
Avignon Festival - Summer. First, there's Maud and Alex, who have just broken up but need to pretend to be two love birds on stage. Then there's the playwright of their play, Richard, who could start to fall in love with Léna, but is still grieving his lost wife. Léna is also grieving her ex but can't remember why she dumped him. So she sings her blues, on stage, with Louise, who might have a little crush on her sound engineer. Then there's the famous dancer Kate who sleeps with her assistant Marko, who's always preferred men.
Oh, did we tell you that Kate the dancer and Maud the actress are friends and would love to invite everyone to a party?

Echoes of Jean Renoir and Robert Altman ring through the wings of "Sunny Spells," a captivating backstage dramedy set during France's annual Avignon Theater Festival. This feature is a finely crafted, gracefully thespied chamber piece that tracks several lovesick actors, actresses, dancers and musicians – and one lonely technician – as they cross paths and trade emotional baggage during a jam-packed July week.

VARIETY

In 'Sunny Spells', you'll cry and laugh, then cry and laugh again. Eventually you'll end up loving life more.
