SHORT SYNOPSIS

IVUL is the extraordinary story of Alex, a young man who climbs on to the roof of a house and refuses to ever come back to earth. He lives out a brief and dramatic life in exile looking down upon a family that he loves but is too stubborn to return to.

SUMMARY

A crumbling manor house somewhere deep in the French Pyrenees and Alex is enjoying a boisterous carefree summer with his beloved sister Freya and their mischievous twin sisters, Capucine and Manon. The children inhabit a world of childhood games and romantic dreams.

Andrei, their eccentric Russian father enjoys life through the lens of a microscope or by walking amongst the trees of his arboretum. His young wife Marie is proud of her family but wishes that just sometimes her husband might exert some control over his wayward offspring.

Keeping vigil on the family is Lek, the mysterious tongue-tied gardener and general dogs-body. He left Russia as a young child with Andrei and has followed him like a shadow ever since.

Pressure builds for Alex as Freya prepares to leave for Russia. When the brother and sister are discovered in a stolen moment of playful intimacy, their innocence is brought sharply to an end and the family is torn apart.

In a fit of rage, Andrei disowns his son and forces him out of the family home. Alex climbs onto the roof of the house and vows never to set foot on the earth again.

Winter sets in with no sign of Alex. Marie worries but tries to hold the family together, however it is all too much for Andrei and his state of mind begins to deteriorate. On Christmas day the twins read out a card from Freya and Andrei cracks, he takes a ladder out into the garden in a desperate attempt to find Alex. He falls to the ground and has a stroke.

Spring arrives and a remorseful Freya returns from Russia to look after her bed-ridden father. The twins seem to delight in Andrei’s new predicament but Marie has started drinking and the family are reeling from the strain. They still have no idea of Alex’s whereabouts. Lek is angry and sacrifices two lambs as a pagan offering to the curse that he feels has befallen the family.

Deep in the forest Alex is a boy reborn a man. He has become feral and weather-beaten and moves with ease amongst his treetop kingdom. His new home is a caravan that he has managed to haul up a tree.

Freya has taken on the role of the mother and eventually has to rescue Marie from one of her many drunken bouts in the local bar. On the way home she is compelled by a powerful force to stop the car and rage at her brother who she knows is somewhere in the forest.

Freya tries to remain strong but a new tension overcomes her as she revisits Alex’s bedroom and begins to re-examine her past. She sets out to find him and is drawn into the night where she comes across Alex’s incredible abode. There is a silent and emotional reunion for them after which they fall into a deep stupor.

Meanwhile Lek has followed Freya and sets about making a strange incantation. He lights a circle of fire underneath the caravan in an attempt to cleanse the children of their desire for one another. The fire gets out of control and Lek struggles to help Freya to safety.

Despite the pleading of both Freya and Lek, Alex refuses to come down and instead steps back into the blazing caravan. Through the pandemonium he surveys his kingdom one last time.

We watch as the inferno destroys the caravan and the surrounding forest. We can only imagine that Alex has died but the smoke clears to reveal him atop of the castle at Montségur, he is still off ground and walking the ramparts.

Alex Ivul never did touch the earth.
“If you have built castles in the air, your work need not be lost; that is where they should be. Now put the foundations under them.”
Henry Thoreau

“Alex, do you know what best characterizes a civilisation? - Trees!
A civilization develops when old men plant trees knowing that they will never rest in their shade”
Andrei Ivul

“A long time before Christ, Pagans planted trees in the names of their children to connect the divine with the earthbound aspects of the soul. The planting of trees enabled the child’s imagination to live both on the ground and off the ground.”
Andrew Badblood

About Andrew Kötting:
“Andrew Kötting is one of Britain’s most intriguing artists, and perhaps the only filmmaker currently practising who could be said to have taken to heart the spirit of visionary curiosity and hybrid creativity exemplified by the late Derek Jarman. Formally exploratory and aesthetically innovative, like Jarman he is also a great collaborator, building around his various projects a community of shared interest, while anchoring his prolific production in an ongoing report on the lives of those closest to him.
His twenty year œuvre to date has moved from early live-art inflected, often absurdist pieces, ripe with their own internal logics and skewed mythologies, through darkly comic shorts teasing out the melancholy surrealism at the heart of contemporary Englishness to two resolutely independent features that take landscape (rare among contemporary artists, he is most engaged beyond the urban) and journeys as the springboards for visually striking and structurally inventive enquiries into identity, belonging, history and notions of community. Throughout his art works he has also written and performed, created for digital platforms and for the gallery (two- or three-dimensional pieces and installations) and is increasingly working directly with sound and music, in concert and on cd. Such activity reflects both his wide-ranging formal interests but also his refusal to adopt conventional ideas of closure around artworks in any medium. Ideas and images frequently migrate between media, being echoed and amplified in these translations. It is this openness, underpinned by an outlaw intelligence and pranksterish wit that marks out his work as both energising and important.”
Gareth Evans
DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

As a child I spent many hours hiding up trees away from a difficult relationship with my father. High above the ground the world seemed less frightening. I played at being Tarzan or Robin Hood safe in the knowledge that the trees would hide and protect me.

Tree climbing is something that has never left me and as an adult I have enjoyed many hours in the forests of the French Pyrenees looking down on the world below. It was from the top of one of these trees that the idea for IVUL first came to me.

Inspired by these early memories I wanted to tell the story about a young boy that leaves home to live alone off the ground away from his family.

A small cast of actors and non-actors help create a world of magical realism firmly rooted in the power of everyday lives. Chronicling the disintegration of a close-knit family the film shows the tragic outcome of a teenage boy who is wrongly accused of abusing his sister.

He vows never to set foot on the earth again and is transformed from boy to man whilst living deep in the Pyrenean forests.

ANDREW KÖTTING’S BIO-FILMOGRAPHY

Born in Kent in 1958, video artist Andrew Köttting trained at College of Art and Design in Ravensbourne and at Slade School of Fine Arts in London. In the early 1980s, while working on several performances filmed in super 16, Andrew directed several experimental short films, which were awarded at numerous film festivals.

Gallivant (1996), Andrew’s first feature film, is a road movie about his three-month journey along the coast of Britain, with his mother Gladys and his daughter Eden who suffers from the very rare Joubert’s syndrome.

Gallivant is a sensitive portrait of family ties, but also of eccentric 1990s England. The film is fantastically well received by critics and audiences alike, and it wins the Channel4 Award for Best Director at the Edinburgh Film Festival and the Golden Ribbon Award in Rimini (Italy)

In 2001, Andrew directs his second feature This Filthy Earth, an adaptation of The Earth by Emile Zola. The film is premiered at the Edinburgh International Film Festival, and later it wins the Digital Prize at the Hamburg International Film Festival.

Throughout the years Andrew never stopped his performance work. In 2002, he finishes the Mapping Perception project. Inspired by his daughter Eden, the piece freely mixes cinema, art, and hard science.

Several exhibitions and retrospectives have exposed Andrew’s works and performances, among them the International Film Festival of La Rochelle and the Curzon Soho in London in 2004.
