SYNOPSIS

Behind closed doors, a human tragedy plays out.

A universal theme, a story of people trapped in an inhuman network of power.

The brutal circle of the Eurogroup meetings, imposing on Greece the dictatorship of austerity with utter disregard for humanity and compassion.

A claustrophobic trap with no way out, exerting pressure on the protagonists and finally dividing them.

A tragedy in the Ancient Greek sense: the characters are not good or evil, but driven by the consequences of their own conception of what it is right to do.

A tragedy for our very modern times.
How did you come up with the idea for the film?

The idea imposed itself: it was both obvious and necessary.

Looking back on the Greek economic crisis, we tend to forget it was triggered by the governments who had ruled the country for the 30 years previous to its onset in 2008. It was the incompetence and cronyism of New Democracy (the right-wing party) and Pasok (the Socialist party) that allowed the 320-billion-euro debt to accrue.

Greece’s colossal debt is impossible to repay and everyone knew it. However, with no qualms whatsoever, France and Germany continued selling products (cars, arms, defense systems etc.) to a country they knew was in deeply in the red.

And the European Commission allowed this to happen.

In 2015, Michèle [Ray-Gavras] was producing a film in Thessaloniki during the Greek bank closures. On July 14th she sent me an interview with Yanis Varoufakis in The New Statesman with a short note: «There is a film here».

From the start of the crisis, I could tell Greece was embarking on a long drama - one of many it has known since its foundation in 1821 as a nation-state. The idea of a film was born once I became aware of the poverty and powerlessness in which much of the Greek people were trapped.
But to make a film you need a story, a script.

Yes. But about what? The people trapped or the trap itself?

I was beginning to gather all the information I could - in French and English and Greek - about the Greek crisis. There were good analyses but also contradictions, hesitations, violent attacks and imprecisions.

The European Commission and its auxiliary, the Eurogroup, were increasingly involved in what was becoming an open confrontation with Greece. This turned into outright war after the election of the Syriza party, a coalition of the radical left with Alexis Tsipras as Prime Minister and Yanis Varoufakis as Finance Minister.

It became increasingly clear to me that the priority of the Commission and the Eurogroup was to save German and French banks. Their purpose was not to help the Greek people but to punish them for having elected leftists. Any concern or remorse about what they were inflicting on the Greek people had completely vanished.

The Eurogroup’s unexpected resistance to proposals from the Greek government and its Finance Minister generated storms of criticism and avalanches of hatred, both oral and written. In sum, the Eurogroup refused to negotiate and ordered Greece to submit or exit the Euro.

I followed these exciting and frightening incidents. The conflicts escalated beyond the economic sphere. Political violence, hatred of others, prejudice, xenophobia, corruption of ideas – all of this festered and spread. These events were contained in my considerable documentation, but I discovered much more: protagonists, victims, unacknowledged leaders of dramatic situations...
But out of this morass of information, where was the script?

It reminded me of the story of a little boy who sees a large block of marble in a sculptor’s workshop. Later, when he returns, he sees the face of a pretty woman emerging from the block. «How did you know she was in there?» he asks the sculptor.

I knew there was a script in my files. But which script and how would it emerge?

So how did you get your script out of your «documentation block»?

Michèle’s message and the article led me to [Yanis] Varoufakis. Having read so many negative things in the press, I had mixed feelings about him. But my prejudices vanished when he resigned from the Tsipras government after “NO” triumphed in the referendum. 61% of the Greek people voted against the Commission’s diktat to submit.

Varoufakis’ resignation proved he was obeying the will of the people. Because despite the people’s NO-vote, the Greek Parliament would vote overwhelmingly YES (73%) to sign the MoU. That is, Alexis Tsipras, head of the radical-left coalition, accepted to submit to the Eurogroup’s «Memorandum of Understanding», a table of abstruse laws for the Commission and the Eurogroup, intended to keep Greece forever in debt.

In short, the will of the people had been ignored. And Varoufakis was not accepting it.

I wanted to meet Varoufakis. In the summer of 2015, Michèle and I went to visit him and his wife Danaé on the island of Aegina. We spoke nonstop for the entire weekend. He explained at length, in great detail, the 5 months and 12 days he had spent in the Tsipras government and his negotiations with the Eurogroup.
He played me recordings he had made, like a whistleblower, at Eurogroup meetings in Brussels, Riga – and even during his discussions with Wolfgang Schaüble, the all-mighty German Finance Minister. I read his notes from various meetings, including those with Alexis Tsipras.

At the end of this first meeting, he told me about his project to write a book on his experience as a political outsider who became an insider. We kept in touch, and we decided that he would send me the chapters of his book as he progressed.

For my part, I was working on a book of my own - my autobiography - while closely following the events unfolding in Greece. On October 31st, 2016, I received the first three chapters of his book, and a few more by the end of December. Eventually, in March 2017, I had all the chapters, including the preface and the epilogue.

Since our meeting, I had been thinking about the structure of the script. I decided to explore “the trap itself”, but without neglecting the people trapped. I had a general narrative outline, with the Eurogroup meetings at its core. As for the dialogue, I used the original recordings and minutes from the meetings. I completed my autobiography and started working on the script.

Did Yanis Varoufakis take part in the script?

As a matter of principle, I do not work with the authors of the books I adapt.

But for this project, I often asked Yanis Varoufakis for technical and economic clarifications, to doublecheck and refine certain scenes, to help me navigate my way through the maze of economics.
Do you still feel Greek?

You never forget the country of your birth, especially when it is a country like Greece. I fled my country because, back then, all it offered to young people of my social class was a life of submission to a theocratic-democracy.

As an immigrant, France allowed me to live my wildest dreams and even to surpass them. My “Greekness” took hold of me again when the Colonels seized power. My film “Z” was the expression of my resistance.

Ten years ago, the Greek crisis plunged the country back into the same situation that made me flee in the first place. And this, of course, made me want to express my revolt once again… with ADULTS IN THE ROOM.

You have an international career. Why did you decide to shoot the film in Greece with Greek people?

But we didn’t only shoot in Greece and with Greeks. We shot in Paris, London, Brussels, Frankfurt, Berlin, Riga... We shot the Eurogroup meeting in Athens only because our Greek actors – all working in the theater – could not leave the country for the two weeks needed to shoot the scene!

There were two possibilities for producing the film. An economically efficient one: all in English, with stars to play Yanis Varoufakis and Alexis Tsipras. And a more financially difficult one: to shoot in English and Greek, with no international stars, since no «bankable» actors speak Greek.

We opted for the more difficult solution because it was the right choice, artistically, politically and morally. We assembled the perfect cast in Greece and throughout Europe. Our ground rule was that each important character in the film had to be played by an actor of that character’s nationality.
Was it important to have actors who looked like their characters?

Adults in the Room is not a simple reconstitution. But certain physical characteristics seemed important to respect: age, height, build...

The film is a reflection on real events, recounted via cinematographic logic and constraints of space and time. It is the meaning of the actual facts that interests me, not the anecdotes. In this story, it is the human adventure that matters most: how these events affected the social, economic and political life of society, and not only that of Greece.

My choice is personal and political. This is a tragedy. I don’t remember who said, «Politics is Economics, Economics is Tragedy». I found myself confronted with tragic characters and situations. Everyone is right. Or rather: everyone has his or her own reasons for thinking he or she is right. The private lives of the characters had no place or interest. What matters is what they represent, what they defend. But above all, what matters is their capacity for empathy, their strength of conviction, their will and determination.

Have you met the European officials concerned?

I did not seek to meet the other characters in this story. Everyone would have had their own version, probably auto-hagiographical. Their writings, interviews and recordings were enough.

Nevertheless, some of them did want to meet me.

Klaus Regling, the Director General of the ESM (European Stability Mechanism) who came to see us in Paris. He told me that Varoufakis’ book was biased. He claimed that the European Court of Auditors’ report on «the Commission’s intervention in the Greek financial crisis» – very critical of the role of the Commission and the Eurogroup – was written by «European economists who could not understand everything»...

… and that Pierre Moscovici’s statement to Corriere della Sera that «there was no democracy in the Eurogroup regarding the Greek case» was “light and avoidable”...

Apart from Pierre Moscovici, others participants – such as Jean-Claude Juncker, Mario Centero, the new president of the Eurogroup, and even Jeroen Dijsselbloem, his predecessor – all now acknowledge, directly or indirectly, the Eurogroup’s lack of democracy during negotiations with Greece.

It is this tragedy, still ongoing, that I recount in my film ADULTS IN THE ROOM.

The Greek state goes bust, threatening to expose the bankruptcy of French and German banks. Faced with the imminent collapse of the Eurozone, Europe’s rulers decide to give Greece the largest loan ever - but its conditions guarantee a complete crash of its economy.

To supervise this loan, they create the Troika – civil servants from the European Commission (EC), the European Central Bank (ECB) and the International Monetary Fund (IMF), all acting under the political cover of the Eurogroup (Eurozone’s finance ministers).

The loan bails out the bankers but is shouldered by Europe’s citizens, not just the Greeks. Europe’s leaders know this. Christine Lagarde (IMF) even tells Varoufakis: “It can’t work. But we have too much political capital invested to turn back.”

The austerity imposed on Greece – the ‘price’ for the 2010 loan – provokes a dramatic recession. A second even larger loan in 2012 is accompanied by a second austerity plan. Greece loses 27% of its total income while its debt explodes. One million people lose their jobs, pensions drop 45%, wages 40%, young people begin to emigrate massively, suicide and infant mortality rates shoot up... By 2014, 60% of children live under the poverty level. A humanitarian crisis descends upon Greece.

SYRIZA, the Coalition of the Radical Left led by Alexis Tsipras, triumphs in a general election for the first time ever. Tsipras appoints Varoufakis finance minister, with the explicit task to renegotiate the debt to end austerity and deal with Greece’s humanitarian crisis. Varoufakis negotiates a debt restructuring, lower tax rates and the end of punitive assaults on the weaker citizens.

The Troika refuses to discuss his proposals and wants him removed from the negotiations: a deliberate process to destroy his credibility, a real “character assassination”. Increasingly isolated within his own government, he is given an ultimatum: accept a new, huge austerity and abandon talk of debt restructuring, or exit the euro. Eventually, Tsipras submits the ultimatum to the Greek people in the form of a referendum. Despite the people’s courageous NO vote, the Greek government surrenders to the Troika. Yanis Varoufakis resigns the next day.
DIRECTOR’S BIOGRAPHY

Costa-Gavras was born on February, 13, 1933 in Loutra-Iraias (Greece).

At the age of 22, he left Greece as an economic migrant to study in Paris. He enrolled at Sorbonne University before being admitted to the National Institute of Film (IDHEC). Daan Schuurmans is one of the most talented and acclaimed actors of The Netherlands. When Daan was chosen as a Shooting Star (Europe’s leading young talent) at the Berlin International Film Festival in 2003, he was already well known to Dutch audiences from his starring roles in box-office hits like ‘Costa’ and ‘Floris’.

In the next few years, Daan played a diverse range of leading film roles. In 2010, he starred in the celebrated television miniseries ‘Bernhard, Schavuit van Oranje’ for which he was nominated for Best Actor at the Monte Carlo Television Festival and ‘Annie M.G’. For his roles in both mini-series, he won the Netherlands Beeld and Geluid Award.

Daan also was nominated for the Rembrandt award for best actor for his roles in ‘Terug naar de kust’ (2009), ‘Mannenharten’ (2013) and ‘Het diner’ (2013). After his star turn in 2014 as the debonair Valentijn Bentinck in ‘Heer en Meester’, he was chosen in 2014 as Best Actor by his peers and received the Gouden Notenkraker.

In 2006, 10 years after completing the Theatre Academy in Maastricht, he returned to the stage and performed with the prestigious National Theatre, Het Toneel Speelt and, most recently, toured the Netherlands in Lars Noren’s ‘Demons’. In 2012 he made his directing debut with an episode of ‘Van God Los’.

More recently Daan played the lead in the Dutch remake of ‘Sé Quien Eres’ (Ik weet wie je bent) and in the controversial series ‘Mocro Maffia’ based on the book by journalist Wouter Laumans about the Amsterdam mobs and their drugs war. He is currently shooting for the historical mini-series ‘Turbulent Skies’.

Esquire magazine named Daan the best actor of his generation.
Born in Greece, he studied to become an electrician and as such he began working on film sets. Very quickly, he became a camera assistant and 6 years later took his first position as Director of Photography on a scope and color feature film.

His first film marked the beginning of his career in the Greek commercial film industry until the day he met Theo Angelopoulos and made the images of his first short film, «The Show».

Since then, he became part of the New Wave of Greek cinema. He worked with several directors including Angelopoulos, with whom he made 11 films.

In 1989, he moved to France where he currently lives, and collaborated with several directors, among which Michalis Cacoyannis, Volker Schlöndorff, Jules Dassin, Frederick Wiseman, Marco Fererri, Jean-Pierre Ameris, Dardennes brothers, Amos Gitai, Catherine Breillat, Marco Bellochio, Radu Mihăileanu, Manuel Pradal ...

To this day he has composed the image of 111 feature films, and won multiple awards in Greece and abroad.

Awards for Best Cinematography:
- Venice Film Festival
- Toronto International Film Festival
- Thessaloniki Film Festival (9 awards)
- Namur International Film Festival (Belgium)
- Joseph Plateau Awards (Belgium)
- Gramado Film Festival (Brazil)

ALEXANDRE DESPLAT
MUSIC COMPOSER

Composer, orchestrator and conductor, two-time Academy Award-winning composer Alexandre Desplat is one of the most coveted film composers in the world today. A nine-time Academy Award Nominee, Desplat is noted for his collaborations with some of the world’s top filmmakers: Wes Anderson, Kathryn Bigelow, David Fincher, Matteo Garrone, Tom Hooper, Ang Lee, Terrence Malick, Roman Polanski and Jacques Audiard.

A true cinephile, his approach to film composition is not only based on his strong musicality, but also on his understanding of Cinema, which allows him to intimately communicate with directors. Raised in a musical and cultural mix with a Greek mother and French father, he studied piano and trumpet before choosing the flute as main instrument. While composing for Cinema and Television he started writing a lot for Theater companies such as La Comédie Française, which allowed him to understand the importance of dramaturgy and how to adapt carefully his music to actors performances.

After scoring 50 European films, Desplat first captivated American audiences with « The Girl With The Pearl Earring ». He has since scored a range of incredible films, eight of which have been Oscar-nominated: «The Queen», «The Curious Case Of Benjamin Button», «Fantastic Mr. Fox», «The King’s Speech», «Argo», «Philomena», «The Imitation Game» and Wes Anderson’s «The Grand Budapest Hotel» which earned him a BAFTA, a Grammy and his first Academy Award. In 2018, Alexandre Desplat won for Guillermo del Toro’s «The Shape of Water» his second Academy Award, second Golden Globe and third BAFTA.

Member of the jury at the Festival de Cannes 2012, he became the first composer President of the Jury at the Mostra di Venezia in 2014.
