Kinshasa, Democratic Republic of Congo, 2017. In the urban jungle counting over 13 million inhabitants, amid social and political chaos, an eclectic and bubbling street art scene is emerging. Underground visual artists, musicians and performers create out of nothing, using recycled objects and their own bodies to express their anger, but also their dreams for change. Despite the constant harassment of the authorities, the strong taboos of a traditional society and the personal struggles of the artists, the movement can no longer be stopped.
He is the godfather of the new Congolese art scene. As a sculptor and plastic artist, he creates monumental artworks by putting together and welding waste material such as bullet sockets, machetes and generally all kind of waste stemming from armed conflicts that are devastating the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC).

Freddy Tsimba

Béni Baras is a self-taught artist that gathers and melts urban waste into pieces of art. Orphan from a Belgian father and a Congolese mother he is entitled to a Belgian passport but how can one prove his double nationality without identity papers? Beni lives in the street but as he proudly declares: “I prefer doing art rather than crying on my fate!”

Béni Baras
Kongo Astronaut

Kongo Astronaut is a lone performer who strolls around the city wearing a self-crafted spatial suit. His “retro-futuristic” outfit made from recovered electronic material represents the plundering of his country’s natural resources by multinational companies.

Géraldine Tobe

Géraldine Tobe is a painter whose exorcised-child tormented past feeds her art: large layouts that she works by using smoke from petrol lamps. With time the fire eventually became her brush and the smoke her colour…
Those are radical performers who constantly put their body in danger in limitless street-art acts. Yas condemn the tight grip of Evangelical Revival Churches on the people and the acculturation of his kind. Majestik questions head-on the international community about the massacres in the east of the DRC and the fratricidal wars fed by foreign powers.

Yas Ilunga & Majestikos

In his urban scenography, this performer links the corruption that plagues his country with the evangelical church dominion over people’s minds. In all of his work he is developing the recurring image of a devil that is “innocent compared to the true devils running this country”.

Strombo Kayumba
Flory and Junior, a duet of performers who criticize the lack of drinkable water and electricity in a city located on the riverbanks of the Congo River, one of the strongest and biggest rivers in the world.

KOKOKO! is a collective of instruments makers, sound designers... These musicians with a punk soul write the ghetto’s electro-music between two power outages and support the artists’ performances with their flabbergasting array of instruments. They composed the movie soundtrack.
Renaud was born on 2th April 1970 in Neuilly-sur-Seine (France). Originally graphic designer and photograph, Renaud fell in love with African capital’s urban cultures since he is 20 years old. He met Kinshasa in 2003 and never really left again. There, he autoproduced and directed several documentaries (some of which were made with Florent de La Tullaye). In his films, Renaud always gets fond of outsiders characters, those who supposedly already lost but by not giving up find themselves making their dreams come true. In addition to his filmmaker activity, Renaud produces Congolese musicians through “La Belle Kinoise Prod”, his agency in Kinshasa.
